Synopsis book

"Do we ever really fight over religion? Or do we use religion to fight?" Escape to the Middle East in this thrilling tale about Khalid, Abdullah and Jalal young men who try to shape the kingdom of Beledar. While the nearest battlefields of WWII are hundreds of miles away, on the streets of Mayasin, the capital of Beledar, Abdullah struggles to survive. In a remote village, Khalid sets out in search of his father, and must face the brutal laws of the desert. Jalal, the young king, wants to break through nepotism and corruption, but in a conservative, Islamic country, change doesn't come easy. That the western world preys on his country's oil fields, doesn't make his life any easier either. In this exciting book, Wokke expertly and poignantly shows the roots of modern conflicts in the Middle East, through the people and ideas that inhabit it.
