Synopsis book

-China, 519 B.C. State of Chu warrior Yuan stands front and center on his chariot, reins in hand, holding at bay a spirited tug from his team of eager steeds. He watches the battle unfold distantly before him, on the Huai River floodplain near Chifu, anxious for a chance to unleash his rage on the invading barbarians. Yuan's eyes fix enviously on a fellow soldier, a halberdier who reaches his hooked weapon over the shoulder of a boor who desperately sprints away from the charging beasts. He knows the result before it happens. The wicked blade rips through flesh and muscle, then sinks into the enemys collar bone; his screams echo off the Dabie Shan Mountains. Yuan glances toward Field Marshall Fong, thirsting for the order to charge into the fray. He needs this fight. He must have a victory if he is going to restore his familys honor. But on the march to engage battle with the State of Wu, their brilliant General dies, and the far less capable Fong snatches control. Prince Kiang
